

This photograph taken just as sun has risen shows the forces of the Baron storming their way into Samarkand, supposedly to help the Khan but in reality to make their way to Kashgar and also pick up any loot on the way.

The storm was fast approaching when the Poles burst into Samarkand and looted the Registan, one of the holiest shrines in the area, they were also helped by the Army of God, supposedly putting down the rebellion. This was now the second holy site the so called Army of God have destroyed. Meanwhile Max Factor had made his way through the mountains led by a local guide whereas Adolf Jung had his motorised transport to get him there and he arrived just as Max's men were hauling out the gold and a fierce combat to the death took place which ended up with the Germans being victorious. Having wrecked the Registan and captured the Khan the Baron made his way to Kashgar under gas attack from the defending Bolsheviks. It would appear that 'Chemical Ali' as the scientist had become known had found new employers for his talents. During the chaos it would appear that the Royal Family managed to slip out of the town and are now hiding somewhere in the area. Just as the storm finally hit the area Ming and his troops stormed into the Pink Palace and after bloody hand to hand combat rescued Phatti and led her to safety through the storm as all the fighting eventually died down.
