

KILLED BY MONSTERS!

This fanciful claim was later made by British troops supporting Count Deadovich. They claimed that as they passed the Tibetan mountains near Hunza in the late afternoon two extremely large hairy monsters attacked the head of their column and wounded a couple of men before they were shot down. This blurry photograph is the only evidence we have to corroborate their tall tales.

As the first days fighting drew to a close all sides pulled back and reformed their men ready to renew the action the next day. But under cover of darkness it was obvious that many clandestine meetings were taking place to make agreements for the next day. Also rumours started to abound about fantastic treasures hidden in the region although not one person could be found to even describe the treasures never mind where they might be.

Dawn on day two saw hostilities started by the Japanese when they opened fire on the main Chinese town but a supply of faulty ammo soon put a stop to their ideas.

The German Archaeologist led by Adolph Jung excavated their first major site even though it was in the direct firing line between the Mad Baron and the Bolsheviks. It appears that a shortage of fodder for their cavalry blunted some of the initial plans the Bolsheviks had to recommence the fight

DEATH BY MAX FACTOR

The American photograph expedition led by Max Factor has been touring the area taking photographs of famous personalities and it would appear that he had made some arrangement with the Dali Smyti to take his picture. Unfortunately for the leader of the misnamed Army of God he got more than he bargained for. Having had his picture his men were about to depart when they were treacherously shot in the back by the film crew who all pulled out guns and started blasting away for no apparent reason then leaving calling cards on the dead bodies.

The photographers were then spotted by the remaining Indian troops going up into the Tou Tal monastery to take a photograph of the local Lama. This appeared to go without mishap except for a sudden explosion which ripped apart the centuries old monastery. See the front page for an exclusive photograph.
